

CULTURE & BELONGING:

A public theology series from North Park Theological Seminary

Responding to the invitation of theologian Willie James Jennings (After Whiteness), this series will pursue an ethic of belonging that builds people toward each other, shared habitation, and ultimately communion. Drawing from the fields of ministry, Bible, theology, and history, we will reimagine communities of belonging through the lens of culture. NPTS faculty and leading practitioners of Covenant congregations and denominational ministries will collaborate to lead creative discussions integrating scholarship, ministry practices, and formation.

“I was hungry and you gave me something to eat”: Biblical and Practical Understanding of Global Hunger in Our Time March 23, 12:00-1:30pm (CST)

The Bible Field in partnership with Growing Hope Globally, a faith-based organization dedicated to ending global hunger, will discuss the reality of global hunger, explore biblical perspectives on hunger, and present practical ways that Christians, in particular, can address and attempt to resolve the issues related to global hunger.
